Obviously, larger estates, or those accompanied by complicated wills, will have a longer probate process than a more simple estate. In Texas, when probate is actually necessary, the process may take years. This is because the will must be submitted for probate within four years following the death of the estate owner.

In Texas, having a testate will means your will almost always will be executed exactly as you wish. Therefore, inheritance laws really only apply to people who died without a valid will. For estates greater than $75,000, the probate process goes into action to ensure that the will of the deceased is executed as it was meant to be.

Wills are legally binding documents that detail how an individual would like his or her property divided after death. For the most part, states have very similar laws with respect to wills. In Texas, to execute a valid will, the law requires that the testator (the person for whom the will applies) be at least 18 years old and of sound mind (full mental capacity).
